TWAIN TO THE LADIES.

"Mark Twain," said a Chicagoan, "crossed the Atlantic with me on the Minneapolis, and his conversation made the captain's table very gay."

"The ladies continually encircled the humorist, and the last night on board he proposed a toast in their honor."

"The ladies," he said, raising his glass and bowing. "The ladies—second only to the press in the dissemination of news."—Utica Observer.

BEST HOURS FOR FIGURES

Why Bank Clerks Have a Short Working Day.

There has always been a sort of mystery as to why the bank clerk enjoys such comfortable hours. He arrives late at the scene of his labors, and departs early. But why? In Great Britain the banking hours are from ten a. m. to three p. m. In the summer time one may see Mr. Clerk emerging from his place of business at the latter hour arrayed in the latest and most approved creation in the way of costume. Why banks should open at ten and close at three we never knew for certain, but there must be reason for these abbreviated hours, and the following explanation has been forthcoming: A long time back the Bank of England discovered that mathematical errors by the clerks were at a minimum in the early morning hours, but progressively increased as fatigue occurred. The worst time was in the late afternoon, and there was so much money loss, due to errors at that time, that as a matter of economy the clerks were forbidden to work after a certain hour. In France, the same law of sequence was brought to light, as was to be expected. There is a reason for everything, declares the Washington Herald, and it may well be that this explanation of the bank clerk's short daily hours of work is the correct one, for certainly working at figures is a most brain-fatiguing pursuit.
